Article 6a

When the price level or the production costs in the exporting country do not provide an adequate basis for determining the normal value as provided for in Article 6 the normal value is primarily the price at which the like product is sold in a country of comparable economic development (country of comparison) and secondarily the price at which the country of comparison sells the like product to a third country, or the production costs of the product in the country of comparison plus a reasonable amount for selling and other costs and for normal profits. When the normal value cannot be determined in any way described above the normal value is determined on the basis of the price at which the product is resold in Finland to an independent buyer or where there is no such price on another reasonable basis.
